17 September 2021

Supriya Lele is buzzing when we speak over the phone. "At the moment I'm still reliving our event!" Lele's carefully curated yet effortlessly Y2K collection showcase that took place in the pink Gallery room at sketch in Mayfair was a smash success. Supriya Lele's A/W21 collection launch evening was in the theme of the 90's/early 2000's, which was fitting as she tells us "part of the inspiration for this collection was my personal style and the influence from that era." Fitted with drinks and nibbles aligned with the Y2k theme such as fuschia cosmopolitans and martinis, burgers, popcorn topped with lots of edible glitter. In attendance was Dr. Meera Bryant, Supriya Lele's Mother, one of Supriya's largest inspirations;

Gaia Repossi, Creative Director of Repossi jewelry, Camille Charriere, influencer and blogger; Nicole Fritton, Fashion Director at Harper's Bazaar, and many other noteworthy industry faces.

The collection launch video shot by Arvida Byström in VHS style, showcased Supriya Lele's A/W collection on a group of friends set in the early 2000's, highlighting the versatility of this collection and the sense of belonging and delight that clothing can bring us. The film highlights body positivity and friendship, and it arrives at a moment when the world is finally returning to normal, and we can enjoy dressing up in our favorite fashions and going out with our friends. Lele tells us "My designs come from a personal point of view; I felt that was a good place to start," Lele's own taste is rooted in a minimalist aesthetic, with her personal style a mix of subcultural influences. Lele's blended identities are reflected in each collection, but it hasn't always been an easy process. She explains, "I never really pondered my identity as such when I was growing up." You deny pieces of your background and culture in order to adapt when you're from or growing up in different places. She explains, "I wanted a portrayal of myself and other people who feel like this, where you cherish your culture but it's not totally you." Lele showed a new side of India, the floral patterns of Madhya Pradesh, the Indian state where her father's family is from, blended quite nicely with the cheeky visible thongs in her collection.

Supriya Lele's makeup collaboration with Glossier features in the video, displaying the creativity and positivity that getting glam with your best friends entails. Supriya Lele's collaboration with Glossier included a limited-edition selection of three lip glosses, a face powder, liquid eyeliner, and a brush set, all of which have been finished in Lele-inspired packaging. Lele when asked why she chose to collaborate with Glossier answers "Glossier is a cruelty-free makeup brand that I personally have loved and worn for years, so naturally when they reached out to collaborate it was a yes." A perfect pairing for Lele's newest collection at a time where feeling good has never been so important.

Supriya Lele is one to watch in 2021, already a young and known designer, her work speaks to many who identify with their mixed heritage. She also knows how to throw a great party!
